Runo Lagomarsino

b. Lund, Sweden 1977

Lives and works in Malmö, Sweden.

Language, geography, historiography are themes that Lagomarsino revisits in his artistic practice, using materials that often evoke memories or a relationship to something, only to ask us to reflect on the conditions enabling these connections.

Lagomarsino's work points toward the gaps and cracks in our explanation models highlighting language's precarious foundation. With precise and poetic displacements, constructs frictions, fractures of blind spots from where to tell other stories. Keenly aware of the conceptual implications of a range of materials and medium, Lagomarsino moves seamlessly between collage, drawing, installation, performance, and video.

Recent solo exhibitions include: We are here because you were there, Base/Progetti per l'arte, Florence (2023), The Square Between the Walls, Lunds Konsthall (2021), The Faculty of Seeing, Moderna Museet, Stockholm (2019), We are each other's air, Francesca Minini, Milan (2019), EntreMundos, Dallas Museum of Art, Dallas (2018), La Neblina, Galeria Avenida da India, Lisbon (2018).

Ser libre. Ya en su vientre mi madre me decía "ser libre no se compra ni es dádiva o favor".
Horacio Ferrer, Libertango, 1974

Paula is crying, because the seagulls have all flown away. Her mother takes her in her arms. She has to make an effort to do so, her belly begins weighing on her, she's pregnant, although this remains unsaid. But that's the way things are, many things are left unsaid, many of the threads joining together moments and episodes in time and space are left hanging; they're lost in time, like tears in rain, or like smoke. We too are smoke, all of us.

The seagulls that have flown away look for a place to land, but there's nowhere to be found. More and more monuments, parapets and balconies are covered in spikes that would hurt if sat on. There's always someone who thinks that seagulls ought to be kept away, they make everything dirty, they bring diseases. They take our jobs, they don't speak our language, they sit on the street doing nothing, they're scary, they never say thank you. They should just go back where they came from, it makes no sense for them to come and ask for asylum here, we don't even have enough to eat ourselves, let alone for all these birds.

Asylum and exile are similar words.

Asylum is dreamed of, begged for and sometimes granted; exile was once a sentence, today it is most of the time a choice. But it's a choice that is actually not really a choice at all, because it's the only alternative to hunger, to fear, to threats, or even to death. When did the age of exile begin? Years ago, decades ago, centuries ago? What country do you feel you belong to, when you were born far from where she who carried you inside of her would like to be?

Jacopo Crivelli Visconti

A letter is intimate, personal, confidential; a postcard on the other hand is almost public, anyone can read it. A postcard is made for travel. Perhaps also to give some brief news, fleeting like smoke, but above all for traveling, light. Its two sides are of equal importance, at first glance one would be inclined to say that the image is the public side, and the back, with the greetings, hugs or kisses, is the private one. But who can really say which side is public and which is private? The tragedy of those trying to cross the Strait of Gibraltar at night, on a half-deflated dinghy, for instance, is just as private as it is public. The age of exile is the age of a drama in which we too are implicated, each and every one of us.

The smoke from a cigarette is ethereal, it curls in the air and then disappears, but sometimes it gets into the eyes, makes them red. It becomes an excuse: I'm not crying, smoke got in my eyes... Bronze that melts in fire doesn't make much smoke, usually one melts it so it slides into a mold to give it a specific shape, but it can happen that one wants to melt it just to make it lose its shape. To transform the message that a shape communicates into its opposite: into a revolt, or at least a protest, be it public or private. They say that Christopher Columbus flattened the tip of an egg to make it stand upright and still. There is a certain poetic justice in seeing him in turn deformed, half fallen, still pointing his finger at America.

But America is far away, on the other side of the moon. So far away that perhaps it doesn't even exist, perhaps it's just an idea, as abstract as a square or a rectangle. When Columbus said that we could get there by another route, it wasn't even America that he was thinking of, and in any case, everyone laughed at him, it seemed like a provocation, the idea of a madman. Runo and I met halfway several times. He was going and I was coming back, or vice versa, or maybe neither of us was coming nor going. This text is another step of the journey, and it is written in the first person, because the first person is the most public of all.

Ser libre. Ya en su vientre mi madre me decía "ser libre no se compra ni es dádiva o favor".
Horacio Ferrer, Libertango, 1974

Paula piange, perché i gabbiani sono scappati tutti via. La mamma la prende in braccio. È uno sforzo, la pancia le comincia a pesare, è incinta, anche se questo non ci viene detto. Ma è così, molte cose non sono dette, molti fili che uniscono momenti ed episodi nel tempo e nello spazio restano sospesi, si perdono nel tempo, come lacrime nella pioggia, o come fumo. Siamo fumo anche noi, tutti.

I gabbiani volati via cercano un posto dove poggiarsi, ma non ce ne sono. Sempre più monumenti, parapetti e balconi sono coperti di punte su cui posarsi fa male. C'è sempre qualcuno che pensa che i gabbiani vanno tenuti lontani, sporcano tutto, portano malattie. Ci rubano il lavoro, non parlano la nostra lingua, se ne stanno per la strada a non fare niente, fanno paura, non dicono mai grazie. Se ne dovrebbero tornare da dove sono venuti, non ha senso che vengano a chiedere asilo qui, non abbiamo abbastanza da mangiare neanche per noi, figuriamoci per tutti questi uccelli.

Asilo ed esilio sono parole simili. L'asilo si sogna, si implora e a volte è concesso; l'esilio una volta era una condanna, oggi il più delle volte è una scelta. Ma una scelta che in realtà non è veramente una scelta, perché è l'unica alternativa alla fame, alla paura, alle minacce, alla morte. Quando è cominciata l'età dell'esilio? Da anni, da decenni, da secoli? Qual è il paese a cui senti di appartenere quando nasci lontano da dove chi ti ha

Una lettera è intima, personale, riservata; una cartolina invece è quasi pubblica, chiunque la può leggere. Una cartolina è fatta per viaggiare. Magari per portare anche qualche notizia breve, fugace come il fumo, ma soprattutto per viaggiare, leggera. I suoi due lati hanno la stessa importanza, a prima vista si sarebbe portati a dire che l'immagine è il lato pubblico, e il retro, con i saluti, gli abbracci o i baci, è quello privato. Ma chi può dire veramente quale lato è pubblico e quale privato? La tragedia di chi cerca di attraversare lo stretto di Gibilterra di notte, su un gommone mezzo sgonfio, per esempio, è tanto privata quanto pubblica. L'età dell'esilio è l'età di un dramma in cui siamo implicati anche noi, tutti.

Il fumo di una sigaretta è etereo, si arrotola nell'aria e poi scompare, ma a volte va negli occhi, li arrossa, diventa una buona scusa: non sto piangendo, mi è andato il fumo negli occhi... Il bronzo che si fonde sul fuoco non fa tanto fumo, di solito lo si scioglie per farlo scivolare in uno stampo e dargli una forma precisa, ma può succedere di volerlo sciogliere proprio per fargliela perdere, la forma. Per trasformare il messaggio che una forma trasmette nel suo opposto: in una rivolta, o almeno una protesta, pubblica o privata che sia. Dicono che Cristoforo Colombo ammaccò un uovo per farlo stare finalmente dritto e fermo. C'è una certa giustizia poetica a vederlo deformi, mezzo caduto, a puntare ancora il dito verso l'America.

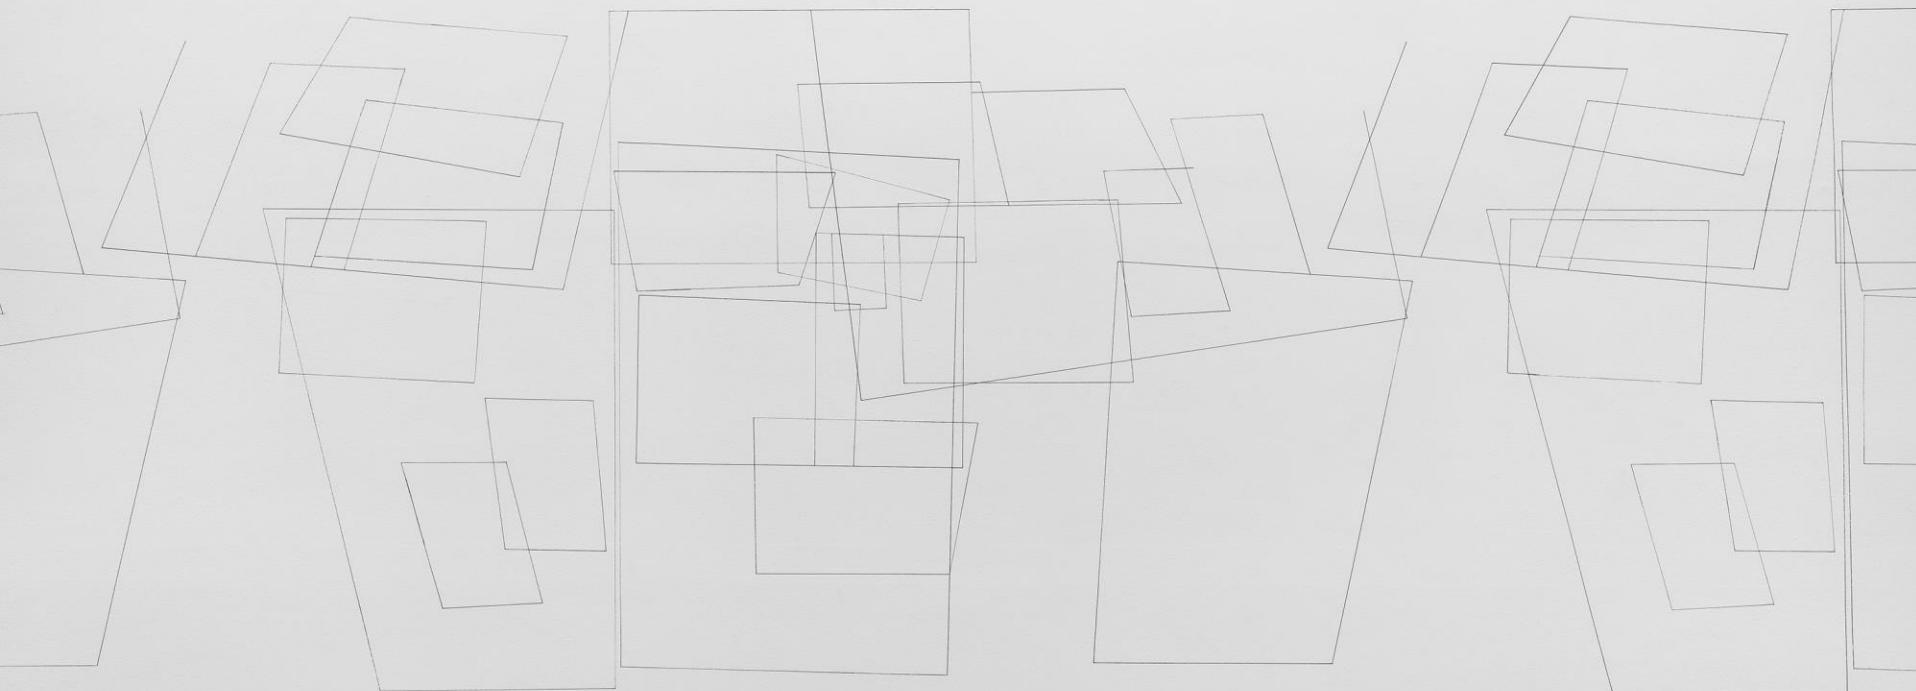

Ma l'America è lontana, dall'altra parte della luna. Così lontana che forse non esiste neanche, forse è solo un'idea, tanto astratta quanto un quadrato o un rettangolo. Quando Colombo disse che ci si poteva arrivare per un'altra strada non era neanche all'America che pensava, e comunque tutti risero, sembrava una provocazione, l'idea di un pazzo. Runo ed io ci siamo incontrati varie volte a metà strada. Lui andava e io tornavo, o viceversa, o forse nessuno dei due andava e nessuno tornava. Questo testo è un'altra tappa del viaggio, un testo scritto in prima persona, perché la prima persona è la più pubblica di tutte.

We are each other's air

Opening 16 May 2019
Until 2 August 2019

"We need other kinds of stories," says Donna Haraway as she faces the camera in Fabrizio Terranova's Storytelling for Earthly Survival (2016) and suggests a wide horizon of possibilities about how these other stories may feel, look or sound like. To balance our earthly living, weak stories are to be rendered strong while dominant stories to be rendered weak. Runo Lagomarsino's practice is weaved around a strong need for other kinds of stories shaped by persisting presence in the face of dominant narratives of power.

The artist is very aware of how language is a site of empowerment and a site of enslavement at the same time. In his approach, materiality become tools and environments of storytelling; they are transformed with frictions as they witness presence. Lagomarsino names his new solo exhibition for Francesca Minini as We are each other's air poetically highlighting the dilemma of presence and impossibility of containment, which air as a life element refers to. The new works he realised for the exhibition experiment with containment in various forms and elements, collapsing the boundaries between materiality and immateriality on different realms of politics and poetics. His sharp and idiosyncratic sense of humour cross-referencing double-faced stories of modernity is at work as usual.

Lagomarsino often fractures and plays with the historical narrative of enlightenment which appears in the materiality and symbolism of natural and artificial light in works such as Trans-Atlantic (2010-11) where he had newspapers exposed to sun regularly during a Transatlantic sea travel; Stolen Light (Abstracto en Dorado) (2013) where he displayed stolen lightbulbs and neons he took from the Ethnographic Museum in Berlin and Pergamon (A Place in Things) (2014) where he reunited more than one hundred lighting devices that were previously used in the Pergamon Museum in Berlin, systematically laid out on a plinth.

Enlightenment, defined as the age of reason in Europe, advocated ideals such as liberty, progress, tolerance, constitutional government, and separation of church and state, and produced the basis of modernity as understood today. For the artist, modernity and its ideals erected through domination of labour, wealth and resources appropriated from colonised lands and communities reduces the knowledge and reality of the worlds we live in to a singular dominant narrative.

Poet and philosopher Édouard Glissant rightfully points out that from the perspective of enlightened Western thought understanding people and ideas requires being measured and reduced: "In order to understand and thus accept you, I have to measure your solidity with the ideal scale providing me with grounds to make comparisons and, perhaps, judgments. I have to reduce."

When there is reduction, there is no relation. Yet Lagomarsino's playful reduction of enlightenment to light bulb and its artificial light reveals the reductive Western perspective in relation to the rest of the world and relates history with contemporary in intrinsic ways.

We live on the ruins of previous futures (2015-2019) is the next passage of the other kind of story. Comprised of glass jars, burned and broken light bulbs collected from the apartments the artist and his family have lived in during the last four years in different countries and continents, the work brings the same institution of enlightenment into the domestic space addressing what connects institutional sublime and everyday mundane ideologically. In jarring already used, burned and broken light bulbs, Lagomarsino alludes to the process of demystification and remystification present in Lampada Annuale (1966) by one of his reference artists, Alighiero Boetti, where a single, outsized light bulb in a mirror-lined wooden box, randomly switches on for eleven seconds each year.

Memorialisation of memories that cannot be contained is very present in Air d'exil (we smoke for the dead, we store for the dead, but they are not dead) (2019). Coloniality of power is a recurring condition in contemporary Latin American societies shaping the living legacy of colonialism in the form of social discrimination and political interventionism. Coming from a family forced to migrate to Argentina from Italy before the heat of colonial World War I and forced to leave Argentina with military dictatorship in 1976 to come to Sweden, Lagomarsino is very aware of the forms of fascism the colonial mind is produced by and continues to produce to sustain itself.

Thus, the dead are never left in peace. Hand blown glass bowls, inspired by Marcel Duchamp's 1964 dated Air de Paris, filled with invisible smoke of Argentinian Jockey Club cigarettes from 1976 produce an eerie feeling of loss and losing oneself at the same time. With the mostly invisible stories of death and exile they carry a kind of melancholia that cannot be easily identified.

When Richard Serra made his famous Hand Catching Lead in 1968 inspired by Yvonne Rainer's Hand Movie (1967-68) which showed a finger exercise, Rosalind Krauss framed the hand in action, trying, failing and trying again to get a hold of material in a repetitive cycle as a gesture of self-reflection and self-reference. The question of how art histories are written by whom and for whom comes forward in America I Use Your Name in Vain (2019). What kind of models does Western modern art history propose to other artists who are shaped by different contexts of power?

The iconic hand of minimalist artist claiming its material humourously translates into the precarious hand of artist trying to hold the inner metal circle of 1 Brasilian Reais, one of the most slippery currencies in world economy, demanding a self-reflection from those who write art histories.

On the other side, the film can be read as a condition report of the ongoing loss of existing resources in colonised lands from the very past until today. And it points out howthese two issues need to be read in relation, rather than treated as separate situations in reduction. While inner coins drop on the floor, outer gold dripped circles are united together on a big steel circle in The Infernal Circles (2019).

"I first try to see what is behind the image," Runo Lagomarsino says. He knows that the world is a kind of place where we are among alien gods with weapons of magic, as a Navajo protection song says. His nomadic wisdom shaped between south and north, continents, oceans and political disruptions caused by dominant narratives is built on the intuition that what is claimed to be contained can actually never be contained. Thus We are each other's air generously invites the audience to imagine together with the material and immaterial voids he deliberately leaves behind. His stories will always be of the other kind.

“Abbiamo bisogno di un altro tipo di storie” dice Donna Haraway guardando la telecamera in Storytelling for Earthly Survival di Fabrizio Terranova (2016), e con queste parole apre uno sterminato orizzonte di possibilità riguardo alla forma che queste altre storie potrebbero prendere. Perché la nostra vita terrena sia bilanciata, le storie deboli devono essere rese forti, mentre quelle dominanti devono essere indebolite. La pratica di Runo Lagomarsino si costruisce attorno al bisogno forte di un altro tipo di storie plasmate dal persistere della presenza di fronte alle narrazioni dominanti del potere.

L’artista è ben consapevole di come il linguaggio sia al tempo stesso un luogo di emancipazione e di soggiogamento. Nel suo approccio, la materialità diventa uno strumento e un contesto per la narrazione; è trasformata dalla frizione nel momento in cui si trova al cospetto della presenza. Lagomarsino ha intitolato la sua nuova personale per Francesca Minini We are each other's air, dando poeticamente risalto al dilemma della presenza e all’impossibilità del contenimento, a cui rimanda l’aria come elemento vitale. I nuovi lavori che ha realizzato per la mostra sperimentano il contenimento in diverse forme ed elementi, abbattendo i confini tra materialità e immaterialità in diversi domini della politica e della poetica. Come sempre, emerge il senso dell’umorismo tagliente e idiosincratico dell’artista, che mette a confronto storie bifronti della modernità.

Lagomarsino spesso scompagina e manipola la narrazione storica dell’illuminismo, che appare nella materialità e nel simbolismo della luce naturale e artificiale in lavori come Trans-Atlantic (2010-11), in cui i giornali vengono esposti al sole durante una traversata transatlantica; Stolen Light (Abstracto en Dorado) (2013), con lampadine e neon sottratti al Museo Etnografico di Berlino; e Pergamon (A Place in Things) (2014), in cui più di un centinaio di dispositivi di illuminazione provenienti dal museo Pergamon di Berlino sono disposti ordinatamente su una pedana.

L’illuminismo, definito come l’era della ragione in Europa, ha promosso ideali come la libertà, il progresso, la tolleranza, il governo costituzionale e la separazione tra chiesa e Stato, e prodotto le fondamenta della modernità come oggi la intendiamo. Per l’artista, la modernità e i suoi ideali, realizzati mediante il dominio sulla manodopera, la ricchezza e le risorse accaparrate dalle terre e dalle comunità colonizzate, riducono la conoscenza e la realtà dei mondi in cui viviamo a un’unica narrazione dominante.

Il poeta e filosofo Édouard Glissant osserva giustamente che, dalla prospettiva del pensiero occidentale illuminista, comprendere le persone e le idee comporta una misurazione e una riduzione: “Al fine di comprenderti, e dunque accettarti, devo misurare la tua solidità sulla scala ideale che mi offre un terreno su cui tracciare confronti e, forse, impartire giudizi. Devo operare una riduzione”.

Dove c’è riduzione, non c’è relazione. Eppure, la giocosa riduzione dell’illuminismo a una lampadina e alla sua luce artificiale rivela la riduttiva prospettiva occidentale in relazione al resto del mondo e confronta intrinsecamente la storia con il contemporaneo.

We live on the ruins of previous futures (2015-2019) rappresenta il passaggio successivo dell’altro tipo di storia. Composto da barattoli di vetro, lampadine rotte e bruciate raccolte negli appartamenti in cui l’artista e la sua famiglia hanno vissuto negli ultimi quattro anni in diversi paesi e continenti, il lavoro trasferisce l’istituzione stessa dell’illuminismo nello spazio domestico, enfatizzando ciò che collega, dal punto di vista ideologico, il sublime istituzionale e l’ordinario quotidiano. Mettendo in barattolo lampadine usate, bruciate e rotte, Lagomarsino allude al processo di demistificazione e remistificazione presente in Lampada Annuale, il lavoro di uno dei suoi artisti di riferimento, Alighiero Boetti (1966), dove un’unica grossa lampadina in una scatola di legno foderata di specchi si accende casualmente per undici secondi l’anno.

La memorializzazione dei ricordi che non si possono contenere è molto evidente in Air d’exil (we smoke for the dead, we store for the dead, but they are not dead) (2019). La colonialità del potere è una condizione ricorrente nelle società contemporanee dell’America Latina, e plasma l’eredità vivente del colonialismo nella forma della discriminazione sociale e dell’interventismo politico. Venendo da una famiglia dapprima costretta a migrare in Argentina dall’Italia prima del culmine della Guerra mondiale coloniale, e poi costretta a lasciare l’Argentina della dittatura militare nel 1976 per andare in Svezia, Lagomarsino ha una conoscenza diretta delle forme del fascismo da cui la mente coloniale è prodotta, e che essa stessa continua a produrre per mantenersi.

Così i morti non riposano mai in pace. Le ampolle di vetro soffiate a mano, ispirate a Air de Paris di Marcel Duchamp (1964) e riempite del fumo invisibile delle sigarette dell’argentino Jockey Club del 1976, producono un’inquietante sensazione di perdita, e al tempo stesso di smarrimento. Come le storie perlopiù invisibili di morte ed esilio, veicolano una sorta di malinconia difficile da circoscrivere.

Quando Richard Serra nel 1968 realizzò il suo famoso Hand Catching Lead, ispirato a Hand Movie di Yvonne Rainer (1967-68), che mostrava una specie di ginnastica per le dita, Rosalind Krauss interpretò la mano in movimento, che provava, non riusciva e riprovava ad afferrare un materiale in un ciclo ripetitivo, come un gesto di autoriflessione e autoreferenzialità. La questione di come sono scritte le storie dell’arte, da chi e per chi, si pone in America I Use Your Name in Vain (2019). Quale tipo di modelli propone la storia dell’arte occidentale agli altri artisti che sono plasmati da contesti diversi di potere?

La mano iconica dell'artista minimalista che rivendica ironicamente il suo materiale si traduce nella mano precaria di Lagomarsino che cerca di afferrare il cerchio interno di metallo di un real brasiliano, una delle valute più instabili nell'economia mondiale, pretendendo un'autoriflessione da parte di chi scrive la storia dell'arte.

D'altro lato, il video può essere letto come una relazione sulla perdita in corso delle risorse esistenti nelle terre colonizzate, dal passato fino al giorno d'oggi. E indica come queste due questioni debbano essere considerate nel loro rapporto, più che trattate come situazioni separate tramite una riduzione. Quando il cuore della moneta cade sul pavimento, i bordi esterni dorati vengono uniti insieme su un grande cerchio d'acciaio per The Infernal Circles (2019).

“Prima di tutto, cerco di vedere che cosa c’è dietro l’immagine” dice Runo Lagomarsino. Sa che il mondo è un luogo in cui ci troviamo tra dèi alieni dotati di armi magiche, come dice un canto di protezione Navajo. La sua saggezza nomadica, costruitasi tra Nord e Sud, tra continenti, oceani e rivolgimenti politici causati dalle narrazioni dominanti, si fonda sull’intuizione che ciò che si pretende di contenere non potrà mai essere contenuto. Così We are each other’s air invita generosamente il pubblico a immaginare insieme il materiale e i vuoti immateriali lasciati deliberatamente aperti. Le storie di Runo Lagomarsino saranno sempre dell’altro tipo.

MARE NOSTRUM

West is everywhere you look

Opening 16 March 2016
Until 6 May 2016

"The work of Runo Lagomarsino (b. 1977 in Lund, Sweden, based in São Paulo, Brazil and Malmö, Sweden) investigates the historiographic, geographic and mathematic models that informed the colonial domination of the world by Western modernity. How can one trace the relationship between the historical and geographic methods of describing the planet that were devised by European reason and the political control of that planet? Lagomarsino's practice attempts to answer this question, setting out from a perspective of comparative cultural analysis and suggesting new, alternative forms of cultural interpretation that stand in contrast with those established and passed down by modern European thought."

This introduction by Luigi Fassi may help us better understand the figure of Runo Lagomarsino on the occasion of his first solo show at Francesca Minini. The project opens with a sign, Deportation Regime, which immediately points to the fulcrum of the entire show. The reference to Agamben—his notion of sovereign power, and how this power is capable of reshaping our political categories—is a pivotal one for the artist. In ancient Roman law, a homo sacer was a man that could kill anyone without being accused of murder, hence without being condemned to death. This figure introduced the legal concept of a life that on the one hand could be taken, but on the other hand was sacred and could not be ritually sacrificed.

From that point on, life became something that belonged to politics, a crucial issue; for this reason, one can speak of "biopolitics". Following this historical thread and the line of thought that unfolds through Agamben's book Homo Sacer, we can try to decipher the riddles posed by Lagomarsino's works and attempt to fathom the crimes and totalitarian regimes—first and foremost, Fascism and Nazism—that the twentieth century contributed to history. In other words, what the Italian philosopher described and defined as the hidden biopolitical paradigm of modernity, the concentration camp - where city and home have become indistinguishable - and the possibility of discriminating between our biological body and our political body has been taken away for good.

Today, without exaggeration, this can be seen in a sphere not as rabidly organized as the Nazi camps, but every bit as cruel: what is happening in the Mediterranean. The maps that hang in the second room—floating there, so far from any customary interpretation of them, like some upturned Baroque stage machine—put us in a position where it is impossible to establish boundaries, to read a map as a spatial/territorial and spatial/temporal convention. The title of the exhibition is taken from the title of this work: West Is Everywhere You Look.

The Mediterranean has never ceased to be the crossroads of a thousand events. A space that must be spoken of in the plural, within a European and Mediterranean identity that is multiple by nature. It is impossible to think of geopolitical reality at the synchronic or diachronic level as an entity that is frozen and univocally fixed in place. All of these changes and mutations, over the past few centuries, have generated conflicts within every Mediterranean culture that still influence and shape the relationship between different populations.

Language, the written word, as a convention, a tool of interaction and pacification, has always played a key role in the cultures of Mare Nostrum, the title of another work in the show. The plurality of populations and plurality of cultures was normal up until the Late Middle Ages. In Sicily, Jews used Arabic as an everyday language, along with Sicilian, and Hebrew was only for reading the sacred texts; later, this syncretism was lost in response to conflicts and persecution. Mare Nostrum therefore also implies unreconciled memories; it signifies a reciprocal fear, dating back over half a millennium, that has witnessed attempts at pacification of an entirely political and rarely cultural nature.

This fear is also marked, however, by great reciprocal curiosity, a voluntary and necessary quest to find shared ground.

And so in speaking of the Mediterranean, how could one help but think of Braudel and his concept of it as a locus of proximity, a concept that has also bolstered the idea of an ever smaller place, a true borderland between two worlds, which have come to be multiple worlds. From the Balkans to Asia Minor, and from the Iberian Peninsula to North Africa, mare nostrum has always been a boundary that is both obstacle and bridge. The climate, natural environment, food, lifestyles and religions change, blend together and are recomposed, depending on whether one is north or south of the sea. A full-fledged Mediterranean syntax, built around a grammar all its own, which allows us to see, hear, listen to this body of water.

So the eighty images created by Lagomarsino help tell a tale of our sea; a sequence of slides offers the vision of a whole that slowly dissolves and gives way to a hole, sucking in the Mediterranean until it definitively disappears. And what can be imagined vanishing along with it is the millennia-old civilization that defined and constructed the progress of the world and of the human race.

Alberto Salvadori

“Il lavoro di Runo Lagomarsino (Lund, Svezia 1977, vive e lavora a San Paolo, Brasile e Malmö, Svezia) è una ricerca finalizzata a indagare i modelli storiografici, geografici e matematici che hanno informato il controllo coloniale del mondo da parte della modernità occidentale. Come si articola il rapporto tra l’invenzione della descrizione storico-geografica del pianeta ad opera della ragione europea e il dominio politico di esso? Le ricerche di Lagomarsino provano a rispondere a tale quesito muovendo da una prospettiva di analisi culturale comparata, suggerendo la possibilità di nuove forme di interpretazione culturale, alternative e opposte rispetto a quelle sancite e trasmesse dalla ragione moderna europea.”

Con queste parole di Luigi Fassi si introduce la figura di Runo Lagomarsino in occasione della la sua prima personale da Francesca Minini. Il progetto dell’artista si apre con un segnale/cartello, Deportation regime che esplicita subito il climax dell’intera mostra. Il riferimento ad Agamben e la sua nozione di sovranità del potere è per l’artista fondamentale, e allo stesso modo come tale potere sia in grado di far ripensare le nostre categorie politiche. L’homo sacer nel diritto romano arcaico era colui che aveva la libertà di uccidere senza essere accusato di omicidio e quindi non essere condannato a morte. Questa figura del diritto ha fatto sì che possa esistere una vita uccidibile da una parte e una vita sacra e insacrificabile dall’altra.

Da allora la vita è diventata qualcosa che appartiene alla politica, una posta in gioco; possiamo allora parlare di biopolitica. Seguendo il filo rosso della storia, percorrendo con Agamben il suo testo Homo Sacer, si possono cercare di decifrare gli enigmi posti dalle opere di Lagomarsino e affrontare i totalitarismi e le nefandezze - prima di tutto il fascismo e il nazismo - che lo scorso secolo ha proposto alla storia. Quello che il filosofo italiano ha descritto e definito nel campo di concentramento, ossia il paradigma biopolitico nascosto della modernità - in cui città e casa sono diventate indiscernibili - , e la possibilità di distinguere tra il nostro corpo biologico e il nostro corpo politico ci è stato tolto una volta per tutte.

Oggi, senza eccedere, possiamo vederlo in un ambito, non follemente sistematizzato come erano allora i lager ma altrettanto crudele, in ciò che sta accadendo nel Mediterraneo. Le mappe appese, della seconda sala, fluttuanti, sottosopra rispetto alla convenzionale lettura che ne possiamo fare, quasi una meccanica scenografia barocca ribaltata, ci mettono nell’impossibilità di stabilire dei confini, di leggere una carta come convenzione spazio/territoriale e anche spazio/temporale. Il titolo della mostra nasce proprio da questo lavoro. L’Occidente è ovunque guardi, West is everywhere you look.

Il Mar Mediterraneo non cessa e non ha mai cessato di essere il crocevia di mille accadimenti. Spazio da declinare al plurale all’interno di un’identità europea e mediterranea per sua natura molteplice. Non è possibile concepire sul piano sincronico e diacronico la realtà geopolitica come entità bloccata e univocamente fissata. Tali cambiamenti e mutazioni hanno generato nei secoli scorsi conflitti interni a tutte le culture mediterranee che tuttora influenzano e determinano il rapporto tra le genti.

Il linguaggio, la parola scritta come convenzione, come strumento di interazione e pacificazione, da sempre convive con le culture del Mare Nostrum, titolo di un’altra opera in mostra. La pluralità delle genti e la pluralità delle culture era normale fin dal basso medioevo. In Sicilia gli ebrei usavano l’arabo come lingua corrente, oltre al siciliano, e destinavano l’ebraico solo alla lettura dei testi sacri; in seguito tale sincretismo è stato smarrito per assecondare conflitti e persecuzioni. Mare Nostrum vuol dire allora anche memorie non riconciliate, significa anche paura reciproca che risale a più di 500 anni fa che ha subito tentativi di pacificazione del tutto di natura politica e raramente culturale. Tale timore è anche sugellato però da grande curiosità reciproca, da volontaria e necessaria ricerca di condivisione.

Parlando di Mediterraneo come non pensare allora a Braudel e alla sua idea di mediterraneo come luogo della prossimità, concetto questo che ha incrementato anche l’idea di un luogo sempre più piccolo, una vera zona di confine tra due mondi, oggi molteplici mondi. Dai Balcani all’Asia Minore, dalla Penisola Iberica all’Africa del Nord, il mare nostrum costituisce da sempre un confine che allo stesso tempo è ostacolo e legame tra le parti. Clima, natura, cibo, modi di vivere, religioni cambiano, si mescolano e si ricompongono, a seconda che si trovino a Nord o a Sud del mare. Una vera e propria sintassi mediterranea, articolata grazie ad una grammatica interna, con la quale possiamo vedere, sentire, ascoltare questo mare.

Ecco che le ottanta immagini costruite da Lagomarsino vanno a definire un racconto del nostro mare; una sequenza di diapositive ci permette di leggere un’interenza che lentamente si dissolve lasciando spazio ad un buco che risucchia il Mediterraneo facendolo scomparire definitivamente. Con esso scomparirebbe anche la millenaria civiltà che ha definito e costruito il progredire del mondo e della razza umana.
